One might come," said Mr. X., "but it would be rather bad reception instead of a good one for the benefit of the theatrical world. Might not some performer come that envy, malice, and uncharitableness are sometimes best clients, but I am often sent for to theatres in London; and, at a given signal, we must applaud, or we will have to go out."